DINNER PROGRAM

Peter S. Goodman has been a national economic writer for the business section of The New York Times since October 2007. His book, "Past Due: The End of Easy Money and the Renewal of the American Economy" (Times Books, 2009), chronicles the roots and consequences of the Great Recession, exploring the technology bubble of the 1990s, China's breakneck development, and the American real estate bubble, while considering how the nation may construct a new, more sustainable economy, perhaps focused on renewable energy and the life sciences.
